SENIORS WEEK MORNING TEA WITH BHP!

Southcare is a not-for-profit organisation that provides personalised aged care and support and community services to help people live with dignity and respect in their own home and neighbourhood. They provide health, wellbeing and capacity building services to people in need so that they can stay independent, in control and make the most of their opportunities and potential. They work within the areas of aged care, finance, Aboriginal family support, leadership training and local amenities.

On Tuesday the 8th of November, five volunteers from BHP spent their day at Southcare's community centre in Manning for a very special event. It was the annual Seniors Week Morning Tea, and the team were given the very special task of serving the tables and taking special care of the guests. Upon arrival, the team hit the ground running with setting each table and plating up the sweet and savoury goodies. Each table consisted of a personalised place card, fresh flowers, vintage tea cups and saucers, 3 tiered cake plates, and vintage bowls filled with jam and cream (for the scones of course!). Once the clients started to arrive, the team were able to guide them to their designated table to sit down, relax, and enjoy a cup of tea (or five for some!) The morning tea was formally opened by Southcare CEO Dr Nicky Howe, who kindly welcomed the special guests to the community centre. A big shoutout and round of applause was given to the BHP Team for giving their time and helping hands. The team did a tremendous job of continuously refilling the tea pots, cake plates and coffee cups, whilst enjoying some banter and engaging in conversations with each table.

When departing, one of the lovely guests claimed that the high tea "was better than the Ritz!". Well done BHP, we hope you enjoyed the morning and hope to see you back next year!
