

SOCIAL IMPACT MEASUREMENT for Cahoots

Cahoots provides inclusive opportunities for children and young people ages 5 years and older living with disability, and other exceptional challenges, to develop friendships, skills and confidence. They provide a variety of recreational activities, camps as well as consultancy and training to help businesses become more inclusive and accessible.

Benefits of Skills-Based Volunteering for organisations

- Increase capabilities of the organisation
- Access to expertise not already available
- Improve services

Wanting to be able to gather more tangible information on how their services were performing, Cahoots called on Volunteering WA to help them source a volunteer to assist. The project was matched with a volunteer from BHP who developed a social impact measurement framework, including a questionnaire for various key stakeholders.

“We worked through the entire project working remotely”, Jess Karlsson, CEO of Cahoots.

The project was successfully completed entirely remotely, as are many skills-based projects, and even managed to continue on in the face of COVID-19. Jess Karlsson, CEO of Cahoots, commented that the project deliverables met her expectations and that working with a skilled volunteer was a positive experience that she would undertake again.

Well done to the volunteer on making their own impact through volunteering!
